KATE SMITH ON THE RADIO - A LOG

1929-47

Being a compilation of programs, songs, guests, and guest appearances by Kate Smith on other programs.

We have gathered the data on the programs before September, 1940 largely from newspaper sources, both on microfilm and in Kate Smith's scrapbooks of press clippings, now housed at Boston University in the Department of Special Collections in Mugar Memorial Library.

While the log up through June, 1940, is admittedly spotty, it provides a random sample of the songs Kate was singing on the air. Most of the data from 1929-1933 were garnered by Michael R. Pitts of Chesterfield, Indiana, author of Kate Smith: A Bio-Bibliography, published by Greenwood Press (1988).

We were given access to all Kate Smith radio files at CBS Archives, thanks to the generosity of John Behrens, with the help of free-lance researcher Albert F. Koenig, Jr. The lists of guests, etc., from September, 1937, through June, 1940, are direct from CBS Archives.

The remainder of the material was researched by Richard K. Hayes, author of Kate Smith: When the Moon Came Over the Mountain, the Life and Career of Kate Smith (1992).

All programs from September, 1940 through June, 1947, were logged as broadcast by Cynthia Hoffman of Saugerties, New York.

A FEW WORDS OF EXPLANATION

Cynthia Hoffman, then of Utica, New York, began her logs of the Kate Smith Hour in September, 1940, as a girl of fifteen. She became acquainted with Miss Katherine Carruthers of Long Island, who never missed being in the audience at Kate's broadcasts, accompanied by her friend Helen Voght. They were known to the ushers as "the two angels" and given reserved seats in the front row. When Cynthia and her mother knew they were coming to New York City, they would contact Jane Tompkins, secretary in the Kated office, for tickets. Sometimes she would send them; sometimes she would ask them to come to the office and get them, and sometimes she would reserve seats for them, and then they wouldn't need tickets.

The first broadcast that Cynthia attended was October 31, 1941 (see ticket on page 45). She did not meet Kate then. She met her after the midnight repeat show the following June 12. A lasting friendship developed, with Kate calling Cynthia, and her mother Agnes, to tell them of special programs she was to be on. She often visited with Kate after her television broadcasts, either in the main part of the Hudeon Theatre or in her dressing room. Fashions producer Dorothy Daye would tell them when Kathryn had time to see them.

Cynthia was fortunate enough to visit Kate twice at her Park Avenue apartment, as well as four or five times at Camp Sunshine, her summer home on Buck Island in Lake Placid.

As if this were not enough to make the rest of us envious, Kate Smith even visited the Hoffmans at their home in Saugerties, in the Catskills, once. It was Friday, December 19, 1969. Suddenly in mid-afternoon the doorbell rang. Cynthia thought it must be someone delivering a Christmas package. When she opened the door, there stood Kate Smith, framed in the storm door! (Quite a package indeed.) Her bodyguard, Salvatore Gelosi, stood beside her. Kathryn asked Sal to explain why they were there. It seems that every time they passed the Saugerties exit off the Thruway Kathryn would tell Sal that she had friends there. Sal would ask if she'd like to stop and see them and she would reply, "No, not this time." Sal explained to Cynthia, "Today I asked her again if she wanted to stop and said to let me know so we could slow down. This time she said, "Yes, let's stop." Kathryn asked to use the bathroom. When she returned she quickly explained that that was not the reason they stopped! It was a brief visit - only fifteen minutes - but memorable, and so typical of Miss Kate Smith.

Cynthia's log was a monumental work, and, in retrospect, a valuable document for those who collect Kate's radio (and television) programs or who are simply interested in their contents. We've indicated Kate songs in ALL CAPITAL LETTERS. Happy perusing - and collecting.

The programs that exist in the archives of the Kate Smith/God Bless America Foundation are indicated by a ●. If beside only a song or a segment, we have that only.

October 30, 1930.

When Kate Smith, CBS' "Songbird of the South," recently celebrated the first anniversary of her radio career, she spent one of the busiest days of her life. After a morning spent at various business appointments, she attended a luncheon as the guest of honor, entrained for Flushing, N. Y., for the first of her stage shows on a vaudeville bill; traveled back to New York for rehearsal at the Central Park Casino; then back again to the Flushing theater; returned to the Columbia studios for her "Meet the Artist" program, and then back to Flushing for another stage show.

The evening was devoted first of all to rehearsal and broadcast of her "La Palina" program; then, with a police escort, she returned to the theater; thence to the Central Park Casino, which performance incidentally, necessitated her fourth change of costume for the day. At 2 a. m. Kate returned to her apartment where some friends had gathered to tender her a party for the radio anniversary.

Irving Berlin Writes Kate Smith Theme Song

"Just a Singer of Songs, Singing the Songs You've Forgotten," is Kate Smith's new theme song composed by Irving Berlin for her Wednesday evening broadcasts. The portly singer introduced it to her radio audiences last week, during the La Palina program broadcast Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. over the Columbia chain.

During the summer season, because of Kate's extensive vaudeville schedule, her Thursday evening broadcasts will be discontinued. Beginning June 2, she will be heard each Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday until further notice. 1932

MAY, RADIO 1941

10 Big Years Before the Mike
for Kate Smith and Jack Benny

Two of radio's greats—Kate Smith and Jack Benny—stirred fans last week with exciting news of anniversary parties:

¶ Miss Smith, CBS' Songbird of the South, marked ten years on the air with a special Kate Smith Hour program last Friday from 8 to 8:55 p.m. EST. at which her radio employer, William S. Paley, Columbia's president, and Clarence Francis, head of General Foods Corp. and her sponsor since 1937, personally congratulated her. In return, she turned actress, appearing at CBS' 45th Street theater in New York in the radio play "Johnny Appleseed," epic drama of American life. Afterward, a reception was held at the Hotel Astor.

The party was really a double celebration, anticipating Miss Smith's 32nd birthday on May 1. Born in Greenville, Va., and reared in Washington, D. C., the buxom warbler who first sang in church choirs and amateur theatricals, gave up nursing studies in 1926 to join the musical-comedy hit "Honeymoon Lane" as a "coon shouter" and dancer. In 1930, after appearing in "Hit the Deck" and "Flying High," she was induced by Ted Collins, a recording-company official and her present manager and partner, to quit the stage for a radio career.

Today, Miss Smith makes about $5,500 a week from her evening show and a Monday-to-Friday noonday program for the same sponsor and has chalked up a record which unquestionably makes her the "first lady" of radio. She introduced to the world Irving Berlin's "God Bless America," and among those who got their radio start on her program are Ezra Stone and the Aldrich Family, Abbott and Costello, Henny Youngman, Ted Straeter, Bea Wain, and Adelaide Moffett. Still unmarried, Miss Smith lives in winter in a terraced Park Avenue apartment and in summer in a camp at Lake Placid, with a pet cocker spaniel, Freckles, as her sole companion: she is an avid radio fan, collects perfume, and indulges widely in sports.

DIRECTOR COLLINS cues young Susanna Foster, who appeared with Allan Jones (at mike) in an adaptation of their film, "There's Magic in Music." Walter Kinsella, radio actor (extreme right), was a member of supporting cast. Responsible for all instrumental music on the show is Jack Miller, whose orchestra is seen in background

Hi Ya' Kate!

That's Servicemen's Favorite
Greeting to Radio's Kate Smith

By Maxine Arnold

"LET'S MAKE IT PRETTY, BOYS," says Kate when asked to pose for an Army led at Camp Haan, Calif. Her homey informality is what endears her to boys away from home. Kate really gets out and circulates among them at camps where she entertains

A WEARY young marine was just coming in from the rifle range to his barracks at Camp Matthews when he was told somebody wanted him on the phone. It was his birthday. His first since he left Ashtabula, Ohio. And he felt mighty blue.

"Hey, Mac," they yelled, "somebody wants to yap with ya."

It was the Marine Base at San Diego calling. Was this Corporal Lee? Yeah . . . yeah . . . it was.

"I'm calling for Kate Smith," a marine on the other end of the line said. "She wishes you a very happy birthday."

The corporal was too tired pulling those butts out on the rifle range. He was in no mood for jokes "Oh, yeah," he said. "Same back at you."

"Kate SMITH," repeated the voice impressively.

"Oh. YEAH," repeated Corporal Lee, of Ashtabula, Ohio. Then, as it began to dawn on him that this was the real thing, he stammered. "Gee . . . my GOSH . . ."

And backstage at the base auditorium, when told that her message had been delivered, Kate Smith folded up the telegram she'd just received from his folks and smiled, happy to have carried another greeting from a family lonesome for their only boy.

If the Ohio corporal needed any further convincing about Kate Smith actually being there, he got it when he tuned in on the "Kate Smith Hour" from the base that evening, heard her "Hi Ya, fellows," and the lusty yell of hundreds of leather-lunged leathernecks as they came right back at her, "Hi Ya, Kate!"

Those "Hi Yas" are plenty sweet music to the Songbird of the South, who goes north, east, west and round again spreading cheer among the sons of Uncle Sam. She gets them from aviators, soldiers, sailors and marines in every accent and key.

From lonesome, homesick young warriors to whom Kate Smith means home, their own family, "Mom," and "Sis" and everything just like Grandma's . . . only more so. To them she's "Home Town, U. S. A." And those "Hi Yas" are mighty precious to Kate.

They're her answer, too, to the hundreds of letters she gets weekly from parents asking her to say "Hello" to their boys, and wanting, if possible, to hear their sons' voices again. "If I could just hear his voice . . . if you could just let him say something . . . if" . . . and she knows they'll be close to their radios that night trying to pick their own offspring's yell out of all those "Hi Ya, Kates."

She was thinking of one such letter as she stood before all those marines that week. One written in the childish scrawl of a little thirteen-year-old girl in Strange Creek, West Virginia, who wanted Kate to inquire about her big brother at the Marine Base. "Just ask for Pvt. Chapman," she informed Kate. "I'm afraid he will be sent overseas. He's the only brother I've got . . . if anything should happen to him . . ." and here the childish scrawl trailed off. She couldn't take that . . . anything happening to that big brother of hers.

Smiling down into an auditorium packed full of gyrenes, their medals shining like beacons against their dark greens, Kate wondered if the little girl's brother was there.

All this and more too—much more—was in her voice as she went into her own rendition of "What Makes a Marine," the poem introduced by Kate and written by Pfc. Paul Mills at Guadalcanal.

Against the strains of Jack Miller's orchestra softly playing "America," Kate's voice went on—

"It isn't his set of blues or his mirror-shined shoes;

It isn't how much he can drink or how often he's been in the clink.

"A Leatherneck is more than that—More than a medal or a campaign hat,

More than a hash-mark or a couple of stripes,

Or some idle scuttlebutt and perpetual gripes . . ."

It was so quiet you could fairly hear the "boots" breathe. And some of the leathernecks dashed furiously at their eyes as she went on—

"It's that tightening of his belt when the rations are low;

His open-eyed slumber lest 'muster' should blow.

"It's that lump in his throat that makes a marine . . ."

There were lumps in hundreds of throats as she finished, and a bigger lump in Kate's own.

Who says a marine can't cry? Just ask Kate Smith. Or you can ask me. I was there. I'll tell you. A marine can good and cry.

Peeking out from behind the curtain backstage beside me was a "boot" from Iowa, who was doing a little dashing himself. "I tell you, when it comes to being patriotic, she's IT," he said.

They'll remember that a long time—Kate reading "What Makes a Marine." And so will Sgt. James Jolly Plum Duff, who was in his own way wondering the same thing. Just exactly what did make a marine?

Sergeant Duff, just in case you wonder, is the big bulldog mascot at the Marine Base. Kate had brought an eighteen-month-old bulldog along with her to give to the boys in boot camp. A lady bulldog. And "Sergeant Duffy," who's ruled the base for six years now, had on his best scarlet blanket with his sergeant's gold stripes on it. He was "all out" to meet the new Lady Marine.

"Boots," as Kate named her dog, looked hopefully around her new surroundings—the parade ground—the obstacle course—the bayonet fields—the boot huts—and back at her commanding officer, "Sarge" Duffy, who'd just waddled up.

"Boots, meet Sergeant Duffy," said Kate, holding the Lady Marine's leash carefully, while one of the boys held Duffy's with the other. The lady wagged her screwed-up tail lovingly.

"Grrrrr," growled Duffy, all his stripes bristling at once.

Just what did make a marine, growled the "Sarge." Things were getting plenty tough in the corps when they took in ladies. She belonged back home in the kennels in "production" work, he growled. Boot camp was no place for a dame.

He held bulldoggedly on, and was still growling as they led "Boots" off to join a number of unnamed pin-up blondes as mascots of the Marine Base.

A little later, between broadcasts, a platoon of Virginia boots from near Kate Smith's own home town were marched up to the auditorium to meet her by their D. I. (drill instructor), who stood a little belligerently apart, trying to look completely disinterested. And failing, but badly.

"Hi, fellows," said Kate to the boys, "what's new?"

"Our haircuts," yelled the boys. Their haircuts were very new. And they kept stroking their heads a little self-consciously at meeting their idol in such a denuded state. They looked like a collection of double exposures—all exactly alike.

"Loosen up, gang, you're too stiff," kidded Kate.

"Stiff? You don't know the half of it," grinned one of them, who used to work in a creamery back in Staunton before the D. I.'s started exercising his muscles there.

SHE had them sing a chorus of "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" with her just for old times' sake, and the song took on new meaning for them. The way they felt then, they knew they'd have to be carried back if they made it at all.

The boys, who believe the moon comes over the mountain just a little bit bigger in Virginia than it does anywhere else, were plenty happy to talk to Kate.

"Coming to the show, boys?" she said, getting up.

"No—er—ah—" they looked at their D. I.—"We've got things to do, I guess," they said.

"Well, maybe when I come back next time," she smiled. "You won't be boots then."

Then she sobered, thinking just where they might be then.

The moon was coming up on the double as we left the Marine Base that night and Ted Collins was hearing a familiar story. "I tell you, Ted, they're the FINEST outfit there is!" said Kate soberly.

Ted Collins grinned. This is an old story with him, this "finest outfit there is" business. He hears it every week.

"Katherine thinks they're all the finest outfit there is," he laughed. "And so do I. We leave every base thinking that."

Kate Smith's only actual tie to the service is her brother-in-law, Captain Lee J. Steene, of the Army Air Forces, but she has thousands of adopted ones and, as Ted says, thinks they're all the grandest bunch of the lot.

Take the boys at the submarine base in New London, for instance, the boys who crash-dived right into her heart and stood there surrounding her, thrilled and taut, while she autographed some torpedoes personally to Hitler and Tojo, and knew that they were going to be on their way pronto. She was crying as she said "good-by" to the boys who were taking her "calling cards" along.

"You know, Ted," she said, "this is the finest outfit there is." So it's an old, but wonderful, story to all of her troupe.

Ted Collins, president of the Kate Smith Corporation, takes the Kate Smith troupe anywhere that pack-saddles and the Office of Defense Transportation can get them. They try to play camps that get few shows. The harder to reach, the better. And some of them have been plenty hard.

Ted and Kate pay all the expenses of these trips, which average some $6,000 a week, and in the case of the trip to the Navy Pre-Flight School at Chapel Hill, North Carolina, when they took a full orchestra along, hit the jackpot at $9,000.

Each week finds Ted Collins worried, trying to figure out how to get sixty people on a train that doesn't have room for one. His capable aid, Sammy Schiff, worries with him. John McCartney, troupe engineer, worries about how he can get his three hundred pounds of equipment and himself on ahead of the sixty to the camp to have it all set up when they get there. Henny Youngman, Kate's crack comedian, worries about what jokes will be funniest for each bunch of guys. And Jack Miller, Kate's maestro, who's been with her ever since she's been on radio—twelve years—worries about the orchestra he has to assemble at each place, hoping that some of the many different-toned "toots" will come out the same.

Their broadcasting studio may be a boxing-ring in a hangar in Rome, New York, a gymnasium in Fort Sheridan, Chicago, a grandstand at Santa Anita. And Kate's "dressing-room" a compact propped against one corner of a box where some soldier is assembling a machine-gun.

The "Kate Smith Hour" is the only show that does repeat broadcasts from Army camps, and the last repeat, which goes out of the East at midnight, often finds Kate and her gang wearily pulling back into New York around five in the morning. With her worried housekeeper and her equally worried cocker spaniel pup burning the midnight oil in her Park Avenue apartment, living for the day when Kate will come back home and "stay put."

Her bunks some of these nights are a far cry from the luxurious rose-and-blue Madame Dubarry canopied affair in that apartment back home. She takes pot-luck now, and just bunks down anywhere the troupe happens to be. And never complains.

She feels more than repaid by that eager welcome, "Hi Ya, KATE!" that greets her in every camp.

Your reporter, who accompanied the Kate Smith convoy everywhere they went on the West Coast, can tell you that "Ambassador" Kate can well say "Mission accomplished" everywhere she goes.

Whether it be in a basketball gymnasium at March Field, the anti-aircraft training-center at Camp Haan, or doing a daily double at the Santa Anita and Pomona Army Ordnance tracks.

The show went out of the Pomona fairgrounds on a stage pitched upon rafters, with its back to the tote-board and the race-track, and the boys jamming the grandstands.

Underneath the stands, before the show, some of the boys were showing Kate Smith how to assemble a machine-gun. They asked her if she were a good shot.

"Pretty good with squirrels and chipmunks, never tried skunks," she said.

They laughed, and another group edged closer to get her to autograph everything from their G. I. helmets to their latest pictures of "Mom."

"Let me see your girl," said Kate to one of the bolder ones, a boy from Pittsburgh.

"Which one," he said. And peeled off one picture right on top of another from his wallet—a blonde from Brooklyn, a brunette from home, right on down the hit parade.

"The best gals of all move to Pomona Hall," he said.

"Don't let him kid you, Miss Smith," said one of his buddies. "They're not all his. Some of 'em are retreads. He's borrowed a few. Mine, for one," he grinned, making a dive for it.

And Kate laughed with the rest of them.

The boys don't stand in awe of her at all. They crowd around her in the P. X. where she goes to get a milkshake between each show. They all ask her questions and want to know what's cookin' back home.

Just as a gang of them from the East ganged around her as she sat in the front row of the grandstand until time for the show. Homesick lads from Brooklyn and the Bronx.

Among them was Lou Ambers, lightweight champion of the world, who fought Tony Canzoneri fifteen rounds in Madison Square Garden for the title in '37, and had just fought a wrench about the same number there the garage that day.

Tired and bronzed, Lou was frankly homesick.

"First time I've seen you since New York," he said, taking off his helmet and sitting down beside her in the stand. He stared right on through the snow-capped peaks and orange blossoms in front of him, and was once again back in the "Garden" in that fifteenth round.

SOME of the boys who'd just come off day shift, some of them from the desert where they'd bivouacked the night before apologized to Kate for their grease-stained coveralls and dusty caps. "That's the way to come, fellows, just as you are," she said. "This is your show."

They found that out a few minutes later, when Kate had an M. P. move a whole bunch of civic officials who'd just sat down in front seats on up to the top of the grandstand for the show.

"This is for the boys," she said. "What's cookin', anyway?"

The M. P. looked a little worried. He lived in Pomona and had an idea that before it was over what was cookin' would be him.

A few hours later the grandstand at swanky Santa Anita that's rung with cheers for thoroughbreds was ringing with the same familiar "Hi Ya, KATE!"

And out in the barracks, the ghosts of Seabiscuit, War Admiral and the others, hearing the ovation, stirred restlessly, wondering who the new entry was, this popular "filly" named Kate.

The most important part of the "Kate Smith Hour" is a speech that the radio audience never hears—Kate's speech to the boys after the show. She makes them feel all the love that goes with them everywhere.

"After seeing all of you, I feel that the safety of our country is in good hands," says Kate. "I know that you'll all give a good account of yourselves whatever you're called upon to do.

"And when you leave, just know that the gratitude and love of the whole nation goes with you. With you, too, goes my own love and a prayer that God will keep you safe and return you to your homes and your loved ones."

It's her sincerity and that "homes and loved ones" that gets them—the saltiest of them, even the boys in the Merchant Marine, stationed at the U. S. Maritime Service Training Station at Cavalina Island, Kate's last stop here on the Coast.

Jamming the swanky Casino in their best "whites," and others in their dark "zoot suits" (named thus by them because of the narrow legs compared to the sailors' bell-bottomed ones), the salty sons of the Maritime Service did a little dashing at the eyes themselves, listening to her tribute to the Merchant Marines.

Kate won't forget them, either. Her entry into the harbor, with the Maritime Band on the wharf playing "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain" and "Avalon." The ack-ack guns that they let her shoot out over the bay, tracer bullets blazing, two shots a direct hit. The gunnery crew asking her to autograph the gun, named by them "The Mary Ann."

"Good luck to you, Mary Ann, and your crew," wrote Kate.

The gunner putted the gun lovingly. "You've arrived now, Mary Ann," he said. Then, "If you must know, I love her better than my own wife. I can always count on her. Always know where she is," he laughed.

"And how far she'll go," a buddy said.

CATALINA ISLAND was like paradise to the Kate Smith troupe after some of the safaris they've made, and they wondered why some of the "gleeps," as the recruits are called, didn't like it.

"Huh," huhed the gleeps. "Might be a tropical paradise, all right. But it was pretty pointless—no women," they said.

The chimes pealed out from the historic tower as Kate and the gang went up to the officers' mess at the St. Catherine Hotel for dinner. The Islanders still go by the chimes, the maritime by bells. Some of the gleeps go by neither.

A few of the latter, who can't tell time, having overstayed liberty, or something, were polishing furiously on the interior of the St. Catherine as we walked in. There's a miniature ship controls and engine steering-wheel and engine right in the middle of the lobby, and they were attacking it like mad. Others were polishing on a floor already so slick that Kate Smith's party traveled at their own risk. The gleeps were about to polish the St. Catherine down to a nub.

Outside the "barracks" others pitched horseshoes, or just stood in navy-blue groups exchanging scuttlebutt out on the front lawn.

One young maritimer won't forget Kate Smith's visit for a lifetime—a messman named Woodrow, who hailed from Heber City, Utah. He'd written Kate a note marked "Personal," telling her about his wife, who was expecting a baby just about any time. They were both fans of Kate, he wrote, and he wondered if she'd do him the "honor" of talking to him. "My wife would be so happy," he said.

Kate sent for him and Woodrow was soon telling her excitedly about the baby-to-be.

"We think it'll be twins," he said excitedly. So happy then he didn't care if it were a dozen instead.

"Let me know what it is, Woodrow," said the singer.

"Sure will, Kate," he muttered, his throat filling up.

A thin sliver of a new moon was coming over Avalon Bay as Kate, Ted and the rest of us left the hotel for the last show.

We passed two recruits going along the beach. They had liberty. It was a beautiful night, and they were wondering what in the hell to do with it. No dames. One of them started a ~~dissonant~~ whistling of "You Are My Sunshine, My Only Sunshine," and was a little surprised to hear some full rich tones joining in . . . "My Only Sunshine . . ." Soon the gleep and the famous singer were making it a duet.

"Not bad," he said to the other recruit, patronizingly, still not knowing who was singing the other mean half of the duet. "Not bad at all!"

Kate Smith's booming laugh rang out.

"You know, Ted," she began . . .

"Yes, I know," said Collins. "This is the finest outfit of them all."

Kate Smith may be heard Monday through Friday over CBS on "Kate Smith Speaks" at 12:00 noon EWT, 11:00 a.m. CWT, 10:00 a.m. MWT, and 9:00 a.m. PWT under the sponsorship of General Foods.

ARMED FORCES RADIO BROADCASTS

EARLY IN 1942 the U. S. Government established the Armed Forces Radio Service (AFRS). Popular civilian network programs, such as THE KATE SMITH HOUR, were edited, with commercials removed, for rebroadcast to military personnel around the world.

There also were several radio series produced by the AFRS, including "Command Performance" and "Mail Call," weekly half hour variety shows, the more intimate quarter-hour "Personal Album," and the black/jazz oriented "Jubilee." Entertainers volunteered their services for these shows, often answering requests from GIs. Kate Smith appeared on a number of them. We are aware of, and possess in our archive, the following:

NOTE: Although Kate told the radio audience that they'd be back in the Fall:

(1) Kate had a falling out with CBS re: "Kate Smith Speaks", which

(2) has been on the Mutual-Don Lee network (out of WOR) for a week now;

(3) "Kate Smith Sings" came back as a 15-minute Monday-Friday noonday program on which Kate and Ted played only Kate Smith records. As far as I know, Kate did not sing live again until her first television show on September 25, 1950.

In the seventeen years that Kate Smith has been on the air—generally on CBS—she has rarely kicked about anything. Last week Miss Smith was in Chicago to accept the 1947 American Brotherhood Arts citation from the National Conference of Christians and Jews. After the award luncheon she called a press conference. With it, brotherhood went out the window and the woman who had come to be known as perennially good-tempered clashed out at CBS—in an acid manner generally associated with Fred Allen.

"You don't have freedom of speech on CBS," the singer said, referring to her daytime program, Kate Smith Speaks (CBS, Monday-Friday, 12-12:15 p.m., EDT). "Every day I get orders that I must take this or that out of my script," she claimed. "Why, they wouldn't even let me talk about Lucky Luciano when he slipped out to Cuba . . . I've been in radio for quite a while and I've been fairly successful . . . I don't see why I should let anybody try to tell me how to run my program."

These, said Miss Smith, were some of the reasons why she was leaving CBS on June 23 to start speaking on the Mutual network. Mutual executives, she asserted, had assured her they would give her no interference.

For the Records No one knew what provoked Kate's attack. Ted Collins, her longtime manager and co-star, and the man who usually does the talking, commented: "If Miss Smith said that she'll have to get out of it herself." He added: "I think Miss Smith is leaving Columbia because she has a better contract."

In New York, CBS officials refused a fight and merely pointed to the record. The sponsors of both her daily program and her weekly song fest, Kate Smith Sings (CBS, Sunday, 6:30-7 p.m., EDT), had failed to renew their contracts. Mutual, in sore need of big-name stars, had offered her a gold-loaded, cooperatively sponsored spot. She and Collins had accepted. The nighttime show was still for sale.

As for Miss Smith's example of censorship, CBS pointed out that on her Feb. 24 broadcast Miss Smith had read a news item about Luciano's Cuban junket.

Meantime, the portly singer announced that she and Collins had another program all set—a daily fifteen-minute disk-jockey session on Mutual's New York station, WOR. But Kate will be a disk jockey with a twist. She will play only her own records.
